Frequently Asked Questions

What permits do I need for a coffee cart or trailer?

Ask the responsible food authority to review your exact menu, unit, base, and selling locations before you build or buy. Check business registration, tax, zoning, fire, and vending requirements with the offices that control them. Get the current sequence and conditions in writing. A private event, coffee-only menu, or seller's promise does not establish an exemption or permission to operate.

What can I use to play music in my café?

Choose a service whose terms permit your business use, and confirm the music rights required for your location. An ordinary personal subscription may not allow public playback; Spotify expressly limits its consumer service to personal use. Check playlist control, catalog, devices, and the paid plan before subscribing. A trial feature or imported playlist does not prove that the plan includes the rights or controls you need.

How do I get permission to put a coffee cart at a hospital?

Ask the hospital who manages food-service vendors or concessions, then describe the proposed location, hours, menu, and setup. Existing contracts may limit outside vendors. Obtain written site permission and complete the hospital's process, alongside the applicable government approvals. Leaving a flyer or receiving no reply is not permission. The entrance, grounds, and a nearby public street may have different decision-makers.

Who should I ask about putting a container café in a business complex?

Start with the property owner or authorized manager and the local planning office. Confirm that the proposed use is allowed, then investigate building approval, accessibility, utilities, food-service requirements, and installation. A container is not automatically a permitted shortcut. Get the site arrangement and responsibilities clear before paying for the unit or committing to a lease.
